Longest Council meeting for McKee Report action

By GENE RIETFORS
Editor, Faculty News

The full impact of the McKee Report (of the New Committee on Student Participation in Academic Government) has not yet been felt, but it has already left its mark in the Academic Council: No other issue in the Council occupied more discussion time, and few have aroused as much emotion.

For nearly a dozen hours in four separate sessions that ended March 12, Council members compiled this box score on the McKee Report:

-Twenty-two of the committee's original 32 recommendations were passed, most of them with little or no change in wording.

-Three additional recommendations were adopted, including Numbers 33 and 34. Recommendation 33 guarantees that students shall vote on any body or committee on which they sit, and Number 34 extends the vote to all Council members. There are now nine standing committee chairmen and five administrators who sit on the Council without voting privileges.

-Four recommendations (28-31) were tabled. They relate to restructuring the University Student Affairs Committee and are likely to be resubmitted shortly, following further consideration by the Associated Students of MSU and the

New committee prepares report

The Ad Hoc Committee on Minority Student Participation in the Academic Council and Committees will present its report to President Clifton R. Wharton Jr. tomorrow, April 1, as scheduled in its charge, according to Hideya Kumata, chairman of the committee. The report will be considered by the Academic Council April 7.

The ad hoc committee was appointed by President Wharton and the Faculty Steering Committee to prepare substitute recommendations for those proposed by the McKee Committee for minority student representation on the Council and the standing committees.

Council members had reservations on the McKee Committee recommendations concerning:

- The range of minority groups specified and adequacy of definition. (The McKee report provided for minority representation for Black, Mexican-Americans and Native Americans, to be selected by "the appropriate minority groups.")

- Vagueness in procedures to be followed in selection of representatives. (The procedures were not spelled out in the McKee Report, but were to have been developed by "the appropriate minority groups" and reported to the Committee on Academic Governance.)

- Possible illegality in the proposed methods of assuring minority representation.

In his charge to the committee, President Wharton stated that the ad hoc committee was deliberately constructed to represent views of Blacks, Mexican-Americans and other University Student Affairs Committee.

-Six controversial recommendations (18-23) were deferred. These center on minority student representation in the Council and on standing committees, a question now being considered by a special ad hoc committee headed by Hideya Kumata, professor of communication. The group will report back to the Council's April 7 meeting.

FOLLOWING THE meetings, Council members expressed varying degrees of support for the McKee Report.

Charles C. Killingsworth, University professor of labor and industrial relations whose motion created the ad hoc committee on minority student participation, pointed out that the McKee Report as it now stands would place elected faculty in the minority on the Academic Council.

"My concern, which is widely shared, is that the faculty not be deprived of bringing its distinctive voice and competency to bear on problems needing solutions." He said that the Elected Faculty Council might be able to provide that distinctive faculty voice.

Chitra Smith, assistant professor in James Madison College, agreed that the Elected Faculty Council might now evolve into "a much more active and autonomous group. It has been largely ceremonial in the past."

THE TWO other assistant professors in the Council, Daniel Cowan of human medicine and John Mullins of University College, differed in their reactions to the report.

Cowan said that while he was "very concerned" that graduate students

Anti-discrimination implementation expected soon

The six organizations which will name people to the Committee Against Discrimination and the Anti-Discrimination Judicial Board have been contacted by President Clifton R. Wharton Jr., and some, he said, have already submitted names to him.

The two bodies were established by the Board of Trustees Feb. 28, from a report by a multi-racial committee appointed by former President Walter Adams and chaired by Wilbur Brookover, professor of education and sociology and associate director of the Center for Urban Affairs.

The nine-member Committee Against Discrimination is to be composed of:

-Three faculty members named by the Committee on Committees (including at least one female and one non-white);

-Two undergraduate students named by the Associated Students of MSU (one female and one non-white);

-One graduate student named by the Council of Graduate Students;

Arthur Adams: Revolutionist

By BEVERLY TWITCHELL
Associate Editor, Faculty News

Arthur Adams, professor of history, is a busy man these days. Busy resigning from the several positions he has held as a faculty member here, including membership on the Steering Committee of the Faculty, directorship of the Humanities Research Center and chairmanship of the Russian and East European Studies Program.

There's also a contract to finish the book on Stalin. . . .

And the seminar which will be the last class he'll teach at MSU. . . .

"Wouldn't it be funny, since this is the last course I'll ever teach at this University, if I actually figured out how to do it well?" he asked.

This from the 1959 recipient of MSU's Outstanding Professor Award (now known as the Distinguished Faculty Award), and chairman of the Committee on Undergraduate Education which involved itself in intense research and discussion on ways to improve the quality of undergraduate education. . . .

THERE HAVE been relatively few key study committees on which Arthur Adams has not served. Besides membership in the Academic Council and on the steering committee, he served on the 1969 search and selection committee which brought Clifton R. Wharton Jr. here as president; the 1969 ad hoc committee on procedures for selecting the chief academic officers of the University; the 1968 Committee of Sixteen, which planned the expansion of MSU's role in racial and urban affairs and led to the founding of the Center for Urban Affairs; as chairman of the 1967 Committee on Undergraduate Education; as executive secretary of the 1959 Committee on the Future of the University; as a member of the 1958-59 Committee for the Study of International Programs, which established the International Programs Center; as a member of the 1957 Committee for the Reform of Graduate Study at MSU; and as chairman, 1951-54, of the Interdisciplinary Seminar on International Affairs.

All related to "the causes I believe in," he says.

"Don't you have to do these things? Don't you?" he asks.

Some don't.

"That's what I don't understand.

"We're obligated to be involved; it isn't enough to teach."

But it's more than involvement in the politics of this particular community. Arthur Adams isn't involved in politics, he says, "I'm involved in academia."

But with all that involvement ("... it isn't enough to teach"), he is a teacher and scholar foremost.

"I'll give you research, publication, but you and me in the classroom, that's often forgotten, and that's the most important thing."

NINETEEN years after coming here to teach Russian history, Adams is leaving to become dean (July 1) of the College of Humanities at Ohio State University. His job includes a professorship in history.

"I don't think I've ever had any great desire to be an administrator," he said (lightly?). Instead he mentioned such factors as a change in venue, the opportunity for a more influential role, the challenge.

WHILE SERVING as chairman for the Committee on Undergraduate Education, Adams once said he was probably named chairman because he was a student of revolution.

"Revolution, as I conceive it, is modernization," he says.

"I'll start another revolution there," he said of Ohio State's new black cities program, which will also be under his supervision.

His interest in black studies dates back...possibly to his service as commander of an all-black battalion during World War II, he says.

After Army service in 1942-46, during which he rose to major, Adams taught history at Cornell University until 1951, when he came to MSU. He was for nine years a consultant for the Central Intelligence Agency—something he says he sees no need to defend, since it was "honorable." In fact, he taught agents the same course he was teaching at MSU at the time, and he says, "I learned more from them than they did from

Officials defend budget request

The MSU budget request began moving along its legislative path early this month with most of the University's top administrators appearing before a Senate Appropriations Committee hearing to explain various University programs and to defend the budget request.

President Clifton R. Wharton Jr. made introductory remarks, followed by presentations by:

-Provost John Cantlon and assistant provosts Herman King and John Dietrich, speaking on "institutional efficiency and increases in the rate of productivity." King explained student-faculty ratios and Dietrich outlined curricular review procedures.

-Vice President for Research Development and Advanced Graduate Studies Milton E. Muelder, Robert C. Ball, director of the Institute of Water Research, and Howard A. Tanner, director of natural resources, speaking on the proposed water quality management project.

-Robert L. Green, director of the Center for Urban Affairs, and Joseph H. McMillan, director of Equal Opportunity Programs, explaining the University's special programs in urban problems.

-Lawrence L. Boger, dean of the College of Agriculture and Natural Resources, George S. McIntyre, director of Cooperative Extension Service, and Jacob Hoefer, associate director of the Agricultural Experiment Station, speaking on the University's special projects in agriculture and services to the state.

-Roger Wilkinson, acting vice president for business and finance, Lowell Levi, budget officer in the provost and business offices, and Erwin Bettinghaus, professor of communication and chairman of the faculty affairs committee, serving as resource people for questions concerning the budget request.

THE HEARING, called by the Senate Appropriations Committee, was similar to hearings in which all state-supported schools participate to defend their budget requests.

Much of the MSU hearing revolved around the senators' questioning the University's efficiency and productivity. "Why do you need new positions (faculty)?" one senator asked. "You don't have more students."

Earlier, another senator had averaged some figures presented by Herman King, and concluded that 1,040 of the MSU faculty weren't doing anything.

"We were trying to make the point," Executive Vice President Jack Breslin said later, "that there are many areas in which the faculty load has increased to the point where they can no longer be increased. We have got to have additional faculty."

He said the University is trying to catch up qualitatively to the accelerated enrollments of the last few years.

The University spokesmen pointed out at the hearing that 35,239 Michigan students enrolled at MSU last fall - an increase of 538 over the previous year - while total enrollment rose only 314. In the 1960s, Michigan student enrollment at MSU increased 122 per cent.

"INESCAPABLE NEEDS" presented by the University officials include: The medical program, fourth year residential college program; student teaching cluster program; library improvement; program for the disadvantaged; water quality program; summer school; science improvement; operations and maintenance (including utilities and insurance); internal services (data

Writing course set for spring

A special writing course for doctoral candidates will be offered spring term by the School for Advanced Graduate Studies. The course, which carries no credit and requires no fee, will be taught by Herman R. Struck, professor of English in Justin Morrill College.

Although it is primarily a conference course, there will be six group sessions, 7 to 9 p.m., on April 9, 16, 23 and 30, and May 1 and 8.

Application forms and further information are available from Struck at 353-0758 or from Mrs. Haggard at 355-1790.

me-esoteric information on the Soviet Union and Soviet affairs.

"I'm a scholar, and it's my business to know what's going on in the Soviet Union."

From August 1961 to August 1963, Adams was on leave from MSU, serving one year as Special Assistant on Soviet Affairs and head of the Department of Research on Soviet Affairs for Radio Free Europe in Munich, Germany, and the second year as director of research for Communist areas and member of the Policy Board for Radio Free Europe.

In 1966-67 he was a consultant to the Council on Student Travel in New York, and he has been a consultant to the National Endowment for the Humanities in Washington, D.C., since 1967.

"I get bored in an ivory tower," he says....

ADAMS also says, "I like my scholarship...."

He received his Bachelor of Arts degree from the University of Nebraska in 1942 in history, English and modern languages, and his doctorate at Cornell in 1951. He did post-doctoral study in 1954-55 at Harvard as a Ford Faculty Fellow, studying sociology and social psychology related to the Soviet Union.

processing, health service and registrar's printing cost).

Breslin, Wilkinson and Cantlon also made a case for raising faculty salaries from tenth in the Big Ten to third. Statistics for 1969-70 show MSU tenth in the Big Ten for professors' salaries (at $17,509), tenth for associate professors ($13,328) and fifth for assistant professors ($11,366). The figures are averages and include fringe benefits.

Members of the Senate Appropriations Committee pointed out that former President John A. Hannah had expressed satisfaction with a fifth-place salary ranking in the Big Ten. Breslin replied: "We think we're better than that."

When committee members asked about the possibility of raising student fees, Wilkinson answered that fees were as high as the University feels they can go. In-state tuition here is the highest in the state. Breslin said that tuition at MSU has been raised more consistently than tuition at any other institution in the state, and that the University is opposed to raising fees again.

At a special hearing for the College of Human Medicine last week, Dean Andrew D. Hunt Jr. and members of his staff presented projected needs for budgets and positions through 1975 and a report on present status and expansion planning.

The budget request for the medical school is slightly less than $1.1 million, to provide for expansion from 32 (in 1970) to 64 entering students in 1971, and for additional faculty. The college is also recruiting chairmen and faculty for departments of surgery, and obstetrics and gynecology.

When asked by the appropriations committee how the proposed College of Osteopathy fits in, Breslin answered that a budget proposal would be submitted by April 6. Four candidates have been suggested for dean of the college and Breslin said the Board of Trustees would act on that in April.

Sen. Charles O. Zollar, R-Benton Harbor, chairman of the appropriations committee, said that to appropriate just what the governor recommended in his budget proposal (which included about $10 million less for MSU than the University requested), the state would need $127 million in new money, which, Zollar said, would be "very, very difficult" to find, i.e. in taxes, especially in an election year. And if it is not found, he said, budget adjustments would have to be made - implying the possibility of a further cut in appropriations from the MSU request.

Final day for passage of the Senate appropriations bill is April 17, which means the bill must be reported out of committee by April 13.

The legislature has set an April 15 deadline for the University to report to the Senate Appropriations Committee its decision on whether or not tuition will be raised.

Group sponsors Soviet films

A festival of three movies by Soviet Film Director Sergei Eisenstein and one early Soviet newsreel will be held this weekend in 106B Wells Hall, sponsored by the MSU Soviet and East European Studies Group. Admission is free and open to the public.

Friday (April 3) at 8 p.m., "Ten Days that Shook the World" and "Kino Pravda," both silent films, will be shown. "Ten Days" was made as part of the 10th anniversary celebrations of the 1917 October Revolution and is treated by Eisenstein more as a political cartoon than as history, according to a review in the Museum of Modern Art Catalogue. "Kino Pravda" is a 1922 Soviet newsreel.

Saturday (April 4) at 2 p.m., "Alexander Nevsky" will be shown. At 8 p.m. Saturday, "Ivan the Terrible," with English subtitles, will be presented. "Ivan" is described by film critic Pauline Keel as an "exhausting extravaganza of evil tyranny," and concerns "the conflict in Ivan . . . between the good man and dedicated to the welfare of his people and the power-mad despot," filmed in 1945.

To the editor:

I am reacting to an article in the March 11 State News, which seemed to indicate a question about the reception of the Faculty News.

Speaking for myself, yet reflecting what I believe others feel, this little newsletter really is very effective, certainly much more so than anything that preceded it. I have found it well-written and containing articles answering a number of questions that come to my mind. It may become a forum for "hand-wringing," but most of us don't have time or inclination for public debate. We do appreciate, however, informational articles and general news of faculty interest.

Please keep up the good work.

I just finished reading this week's (March 10) edition and was quite excited about the report of innovative teaching-learning methods in COM 100 and SOC 448. I'd like to see more reports on what innovations in the classroom are taking place on this campus.

Benefit improvements approved for APs

The Board of Trustees at its March meeting approved three benefit improvements for the administrative - personnel staff, effective July 1:

— Immediate participation in the TIAA-CREF Retirement Program with University contribution. Executive Vice President Jack Breslin said this would cost the University about $30,000 annually.

— Reimbursement of tuition charged by MSU to an administrative - professional staff member who has successfully completed a course for a maximum of five credit hours per term which relates to his work or professional development. To be eligible, the AP member must have been employed by MSU one full year and must have permission of his dean, department or administrative head. Breslin said this would cost the University from $3,000 to $4,000 annually.

— A new pay schedule to include a general increase for all APs each July 1, providing University funds are available, plus consideration for an individual merit increase on the anniversary date of employment. Breslin said this would cost about $200,000 annually.

The 534 administrative - professionals at MSU are divided into 10 levels "in accordance with the responsibilities of the position, duties and qualifications," according to Gerald O'Connor, assistant director of personnel.

Salaries range from a minimum for AP-I, the lowest level, of $7,975 to a minimum for AP-X, the highest level, of $18,170, with no maximum for AP-X. (All other levels have a maximum salary, ranging from $2,155 to $5,595 more than the minimum for that level.)

The newly - adopted plan, O'Connor said, was designed to allow the AP member to progress to the maximum salary within his level's range in about six years. No AP may receive more than the maximum salary in his classification. His position may, however, be reclassified.

Reclassification of an AP position requires an interview or a questionnaire from the personnel department, approved by the department head, dean of the college (if it is an academic position), personnel director, Breslin and then the trustees.

Decisions for reclassification are based upon duties being performed, O'Connor said. The position in question may be compared with similar positions at other institutions, such as other universities or civil service.

The administrative - professional staff, the smallest group of workers at MSU, range from administrative secretaries to accountants to the assistants to the president. The line is drawn, O'Connor said, at the University vice president level. AP positions usually require a degree, he said.

Designation of these employees as "administrative - professional" was approved by the trustees July 1, 1961, to provide for "uniform personnel policies and salary ranges," O'Connor said. They had previously been known as "board appointments."

In other action the trustees: Approved current policies on sponsored research, with particular interest in the policy which prohibits classified research; and, on a motion from Trustee Kenneth Thompson, decided to mark the 100th anniversary of the entrance of women to this campus by encouraging the Alumni Association to consider only women for the Distinguished Alumni Awards presented at June commencement.

A resolution endorsing and sanctioning independence for Oakland University was approved by the Board of Trustees at its March meeting. Full autonomy depends on legislation currently on the Michigan House floor. The trustees instructed the officers of MSU to return to the board with proposals on legal and financial aspects of the separation prior to formal execution or action.

Oakland, which has been a MSU affiliate since 1957, has sought independence since last fall and received support from the State Board of Education. A statement from recently-appointed Oakland Chancellor Donald D. O'Dowd reads: "At this point in our history, the thrust of our development, the nature of our program and the magnitude of our operation clearly require the assistance and guidance of a full time board . . ."

March gifts, grants total $1.7 million

The more than $1.7 million in gifts and grants accepted at the March 20 meeting of the Board of Trustees includes support for scholarships, research and educational programs in 44 departments on the campus.

Milton E. Muelder, vice president for research development, reported to the Board that 77 per cent of the grand total was from the federal government. Federal agencies provided 92 per cent of the support earmarked for either research or educational purposes, he said.

More than $36,000 of the March total ($1,722,284) is for scholarships.

Among faculty research projects receiving support are: A study of young people's responses to TV violence by Bradley S. Greenberg, associate professor of communication ($96,000 from National Institute of Mental Health); an attempt to develop methods for recognizing symptoms of water eutrophication by Robert C. Ball, director of the Institute of Water Research ($73,604 from the Department of Interior); research on plant photorespiration by N. E. Tolbert, professor of biochemistry ($78,000 from the National Science Foundation); and a plan to develop computerized plant identification by John H. Beaman, professor of botany and plant pathology ($84,000 from NSF).

Grants were awarded to the following: D.R. Heldman, agricultural engineering, $22,989 from U.S. Army, for research on energy of moisture adsorption on rehydrating freeze-dried meat; P.D. Kindel, biochemistry, $30,668 from National Institutes of Health (NIH), to study biosynthesis of D-apirose and plant polysaccharides; J.W. Thomas, dairy, $24,300 from Agway, Inc. and Agri-Technical, Inc., test effectiveness of stimulant to increase milk production of cows after mid-lactation; R.S. Emery, dairy, $2,000 Diamond Shamrock Chemical Co., determine relative resistance to ruminal destruction of DL-methionine and obtain evidence of DL-methionine passage to abomasum; R.M. Cook, dairy, $5,000 from Shell Chemical Co., study metabolism of pesticides in ruminants; T.I. Hedrick, food science, $1,301 from Envitron Corp., aseptic packaging of dairy products in plastic coated containers; A.A. DeHertog, horticulture, $2,775 from Associate Bulb Growers of Holland, research on mechanization in rooting rooms for flower bulbs; D.H. Dewey, horticulture, $1,000 from Michigan Apple Committee, to improve internal quality of apples for fresh market and processing; and W.H. Carlson, horticulture, $500 from Sierra Chemical Co., support bedding plant research.

Others awarded grants were: D.P. White and Gerhardt Schneider, forestry, $4,800 from American Can Co., study growth characteristics of containerized forest planting stock; W.B. Lloyd, packaging, $5,000 from ALCO Universal, Inc., study of transportation problems of factory assembled housing units; C.Y. Yang, advertising, $200, from Crain Communication, Inc., research in advertising media; D.K. Berlo, communication, $20,000 from U.S. Office of Civil Defense, communication processes in civil defense programs; Rexford Carrow, anatomy, $44,038 from NIH, study structure and function of skeletal muscle; C.W. Welsh, anatomy, $25,000 from National Science Foundation (NSF), relationship of specific areas of central nervous system to tumorigenesis; J.I. Johnson, biophysics, $28,545, from NIH, development of afferent neural centers; G.J. Grega, physiology, $14,069 from NIH, nutritional blood flow during hemorrhagic shock; and W.J. Hooker, botany and plant pathology, $10,027 from NIH, research for a DNA plant virus.

The following were also awarded grants; R.G. Wetzel, botany and plant pathology, Kellogg Biological Station, $21,300 from Office of Water Resources Research, U.S. Department of Interior, to explore basic processes and pathways of nitrogen utilization and uptake in aquatic habitats; J.L. Dye, chemistry, $35,000 from Atomic Energy Commission, electrochemistry and spectra of metal-ammonia and metal-amine solutions and kinetics of electron and proton transfer reactions; H.A. Eick, chemistry, $35,000 from Atomic Energy Commission, investigation of lanthanide boron, carbon, nitrogen, silicon, chalcogenide and halide systems at elevated temperatures; J.B. Kinsinger, chemistry, $2,500 from Dow Chemical Co., for unrestricted research; A.I. Popov, chemistry $29,544 from NIH, physicochemical properties of convulsant tetrazoles; R.H. Grubbs, chemistry, $4,970 from Research Corporation of New York, multisite organometallic reactions; G.A. Melson, chemistry, $4,810 from Research Corporation of New York, coordination chemistry of scandium; and Angus Howitt, entomology, $2,500 from Shell Development Co., evaluation of experimental spray materials.

Grants were also accepted for: Kenneth Cummins, Kellogg Biological Station, $38,582 from Office of Water Resources Research, U.S. Department of Interior, establish stable community in semi-controlled lotic ecosystem using biota of Linesville Creek; Martin Balaban, zoology, $910 from NIH, neural correlates of behavioral ontogeny; A.M. Barch, psychology, $15,000 from NSF, for undergraduate research training and participation in experimental psychology; Philipp Gerhardt, microbiology and public health, $5,000 from Office of Naval Research, study ultrastructure of microbial spore membranes. Other grants included: J.B. Hook, pharmacology, $9,000 from Kidney Foundation of Michigan, role of renal hemodynamic changes in saluretic-diuretic response to furosemide and ethacrynic acid; Changes in renal lymphatic system(s); D.A. Reinke, pharmacology, $5,106 from NIH, effects of progestins on uterine contractile activity; K.E. Gertsen, large animal surgery and medicine, $750 from Blyth Davis Memorial Foundation, study of endotoxic shock in the equine; and George Eyster, small animal surgery and medicine, $5,000 from General Motors Research, surgical development of General Motors spiral prosthetic heart valve.

Council on McKee Report. . .

might be under-represented, he was not worried about student representation in general.

"I don't consider students a threat," he said. "We just have to see to it that they are representative of the groups that send them to the Council."

He expressed reservations about the methods proposed to attain minority student representation. "I don't think we should foreclose the future in trying to solve today's problems. We have to insure that today's solutions will stand the test of time."

Mullins said he supported the McKee Report, and he expressed admiration for the manner in which McKee defended the report in the Council.

"It's not something to last a thousand years," Mullins said. "You can't anticipate all the holes, but you have to support the principles."

He said he favored the section on minority student representation. "The time for this is here. One can only hope that it won't be needed someday."

MOST of the debate on the McKee Report centered on recommendation 18 ("There shall be additional seats for minority student representatives on the Academic Council and all standing committees of the Council. . .") and recommendations 19-22 (which specified numbers for that representation on the Council and the committees).

Killingsworth expressed concern over possible illegalities in specifying numbers for minority students.

At its March 12 meeting, the Council received a charge to the ad hoc committee from President Clifton R. Wharton Jr. Coupled with that charge was Wharton's suggestion for modifying recommendations 18-23 to follow "a set of procedures already approved by the Academic Council and the Board of Trustees in the case of the Brookover Committee Report."

But some Council members described the President's charge and his suggestions as "prejudicial" and "surprisingly specific," and Wharton eliminated the suggestions from his charge.

Emotions peaked during the same meeting when Robert L. Green, director of the Center for Urban Affairs, addressed the Council and questioned its "legitimacy to pass on the rights of blacks to have a vote in academic government."

He said it was hypocritical now to begin articulating concerns over minority student representation after so many years during which blacks were denied any representation.

"When blacks on this campus were being discriminated against," he asked the Council, "where were you? If you cannot speak to that question, then you must pass this recommendation (18)."

James McKee, professor of sociology and chairman of the committee that wrote the report, said the move to reconsider recommendations 18-23 was "backing off from the question," and he said that this could "promote entirely different kinds of constructions (of the report) than were intended by this body."

Composition of the Anti-Discrimination Judicial Board is identical, except that three undergraduates are to be named by ASMSU. * * *

THE BROOKOVER REPORT states that Joseph McMillan, as director of Equal Opportunity Programs, or his designee will serve as executive secretary of the Committee Against Discrimination. McMillan said he is now hiring staff and will not decide whether he will sit with the committee or if he'll designate someone else until the committee is named and he has a staff to work with.

Though President Wharton set no deadline for submission of the names, he said he is "sure they will get that in promptly." He said either he or the executive secretary would call the first meeting of the committee.

The President, according to the report, is to name the secretary to the Anti-Discrimination Judicial Board, who will serve ex officio without vote. Wharton said he would probably wait until the board is fully constituted before naming the person.

"I pushed it through, I pushed it very hard," Wharton said of the Brookover Report, "so I'm not going to just sit back now. I expect the names within the first weeks of the term."

He also said that several pending cases of alleged discrimination would be turned over to one of the new bodies for review, though he said he would check with the individuals involved to see if they wish their cases to be reviewed by these bodies. * * *

PAST PROCEDURES for handling complaints of alleged discrimination have varied, depending on where the questions arose. Executive Vice President Jack Breslin, Presidential Assistant Elliott G. Ballard, McMillan, Center for Urban Affairs Director Robert Green, President Wharton and even Mrs. Wharton have handled cases.

persons of non-English speaking origins in the Americas; Native and Oriental Americans, and that the committee's deliberations should reflect these groups.

He also recommended that the issue of legality be checked with "appropriate legal counsel."

Members of the committee, which met yesterday and twice last week, are: Jack M. Hamilton, assistant professor of chemistry; Kumata, director of the International Communication Institute; Winston R. Oberg, professor of management. Robert L. Wright, professor of American Thought and Language, was unable to attend the meetings. All are Academic Council members.

Student members are: Peter F. Flynn, president of the Council of Graduate Students; Michael L. Hudson, director of the Office of Black Affairs for the Associated Students of MSU; Alfred J.
