

I ~~Mobil~~IZE APARTHEID

Without imported oil the wheels of apartheid, its police and military, cannot turn!

Mobil is the biggest U.S. company supplying petroleum products and refining oil in South Africa.

APARTHEID: BROUGHT TO YOU BY A "GRANT" FROM MOBIL:

October 11 and 12 are international days of support for South African political prisoners--those (primarily Blacks) imprisoned for opposing apartheid in their own land. Those arrested during the State of Emergency which began in June, 1986, number more than 30,000, of whom 40 percent are 18 years old or younger.

We take this opportunity to acknowledge one of the corporate giants whose direct and indirect contributions help make apartheid, its police and military apparatus possible.

Mobil is the largest U.S. oil company in South Africa, where it reports:

Number of employees:	White	1,356
(1986)	Asian/Colored	710
	African	947
	TOTAL	3,013

Total assets: $426 million

Subsidiaries	Mobil Oil Southern Africa (Pty.) Ltd.
wholly owned	Mobil Oil Refining Co. SA (Pty.) Ltd.
by Mobil Oil	Westchester Insurance Co. (Pty.) Ltd.
	Condor Oil (Pty.) Ltd.
	Violet (Pty.) Ltd.

South Africa does not have oil of its own. Instead it depends totally on foreign oil companies to supply, refine and distribute petroleum products the white minority regime needs for its economic and political survival.

Mobil leads the list of U.S. companies extending this lifeline to the apartheid state.

Oil is so strategic that South African law requires special cooperation from oil companies operating in the country. As a prerequisite for doing business in South Africa Mobil has agreed to comply with these laws requiring it to

- supply oil to the government upon request,
- place no restrictions on the resale of their products (such as prohibitions on resale to the police and military),
- provide no information on South African sales to its home office,
- surrender its facilities to military occupation during emergencies.

While Mobil's representatives publicize the company's philanthropic activities in South Africa and verbally condemn the vicious racist system, Mobil's products and services provide de facto support for apartheid.

We call on Mobil to convert its rhetoric into reality: pull its operations and products out of South Africa, and cut the pipeline to apartheid.
