The companies checked (✓) are significant because of
1) their economic or strategic importance to the maintenance of the white supremacist system in South Africa;
2) their connections with the U.S. government; or 3) their having been under protest or examination about their South African operations by stockholders, institutional investors, employees, student groups, or groups concerned about African issues.

NOTE: This U.S. Dept. of Commerce list does not include all corporations with important links with South Africa, for example the Chase Manhattan bank has interests in the Standard Bank there. Polaroid Corporation has no investments but has come under protest because of the sale of products to the South African government.
